THE FORESTRY SOCIETIES

THE ROYAL FORESTRY SOCIETY OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

President: MAJOR SIR RICHARD PROBY, Bt., M.C. Secretary: R. C. B. GARDNER, O.B.E. Asst. Secretary: MRS. J. M. GENESE, 49 Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

This Society was formed for the advancement of forestry and arboriculture and has, for sixty years, urged the importance of woodlands as a national asset, and has endeavoured to improve and extend forestry operations, and to arouse, stimulate and guide practical interest on the part of the State as well as the private owner.

The Society publishes a Quarterly Journal of Forestry which is sent free to members; it has instituted examinations for woodmen and foresters; it arranges visits to woodland areas at home and abroad.

Woodman's Certificate

Candidates will be expected to prove their ability to perform the following operations:—Planting, Nursery Work, Felling, Pruning, Fencing, Hedging, Measuring Timber, and Keeping Tools. Candidates should provide their own tools. Candidates may also be asked to identify the more important trees, bushes, and shrubs, and to indicate their requirements as regards light, soil, and exposure. They will also be expected to name home-grown timbers and to recognize the commoner diseases and injurious insects, and to suggest methods of treatment.

Forester's Certificate

Candidates must previously have obtained either the Woodman's Certificate of this Society, the Junior Certificate of the Royal Scottish Forestry Society, or the Foreman's Certificate of the Forestry Commission.

Questions may be set on subjects including the following:—Soils. Plant structure and food. Forest pests and fungi. Structure identification and uses of common timbers. Simple surveying. Practical forestry work, including creosoting. Valuation and prices of timber. Costs of various operations.

Regulations and further information can be obtained from the Assistant Secretary for either of the two examinations.
